Grammar is the structure of language: it is how we put words together to create meaningful, widely understood sentences. As native English speakers, we may have got some grammar schools at school. By and large, however, our knowledge of grammar is innate: we don't need to know the quirky terms for what all parts of speech are in order to speak correctly. For non-native speakers, however, grammar is much more complicated. This is especially true because not the grammar of each language functions the same way. For example, The Chinese language is not multiple, and the way past and future hard work is different. Similarly, many languages, such as Hebrew and French, are gendered, so they refer to inanimate objects using the equivalent of it and his. Because it is a misconception to get used to a new way of speaking, non-official speakers need to study formal grammar so they can understand put the sentences together correctly and freely in English. How can you incorporate grammar into your lessons? Sheets are really a great way to get your grammar class. When your students do a series of exercises practicing the same concept of grammar (e.g. (e.g. or indirect objects), they get a better understanding of how the concept works in different environments. Doing work on their own also makes your students pay attention and try more to help them apply the grammatical concepts they have learned in their writing and speech.
